A better future relies on attracting to public service the commitment and sound judgment of bright, outstanding young leaders. This belief is what led President Truman, when approached by a bipartisan group of admirers near the end of his life, to encourage the creation of a living memorial devoted to this purpose rather than a bricks and mortar monument. Since 1975, the Truman Scholarship Foundation has fulfilled that mission: supporting the potential of terrific young people from across the United States committed to public service, more than 2,900 so far.

Our purpose is clear. The need as urgent as ever. Whether the issue is jobs or climate change, fiscal reform or health care, our national affairs are all too often seen as mired in division and paralysis, highly polarized and drowning in private dollars. And the institutions that conduct our nation's affairs lack public confidence, especially the trust of younger Americans.

It is in this environment that the Truman Scholarship Foundation, initially only a source of scholarship support, today nurtures, supports and sustains the ideals and ambitions of young leaders. Along with providing scholarships for graduate school, we operate a week-long program for each new class of Truman Scholars that builds community among them and ensures intensive mentoring from more seasoned Scholars. We also bring Truman Scholars to Washington, DC, for anywhere from three months to two years—after college but before graduate school—and place them in positions with the federal government or with nationally focused nonprofit organizations. And we have launched new programs in the past year for Truman Scholars with a particular interest in electoral politics or in senior level positions in the federal executive branch.

Almost four decades into our work, we honor President Truman with a unique approach to effecting outstanding public service leadership, an approach he prescribed and that is simultaneously low-cost and high-impact. This report chronicles the key activities of the Truman Foundation in 2013, and it highlights the ways that the Foundation continues to represent an outstanding public investment, one that honors a president from the last century by preparing leaders for the challenges of the future.

The 2013 Selection Process

In 2013, the Truman Foundation selected 62 new Truman Scholars. The new Scholars were announced on April 10, 2013, after a rigorous national selection process during which they were chosen from among 629 applications received from students at 293 different colleges and universities.

The selection process began with a review of all received applications by the Foundation's Finalist Selection Committee, a group made up of eighteen former Truman Scholars, distinguished public servants and admissions representatives from top law and public affairs graduate programs. The committee met for three days in Annapolis, Maryland, shortly after the February 5th application deadline and selected 199 finalists from among the 629 applications received.

Then, during the month of March, these finalists were interviewed in-person by one of seventeen Regional Review Panels convened across the country with each panel consisting of 5-9 senior figures in public service, including many former Truman Scholars. These panels made final choices about the 2013 class of Truman Scholars, a group of 62 new Scholars representing 54 different institutions, including 27 public colleges and universities plus three of the service academies.

In total, 103 elected officials, distinguished public servants, former Truman Scholars, and graduate admissions representatives gave their time to assist the Truman Foundation with the 2013 Scholar selection process. In addition, the Truman Foundation relied on the superb efforts of hundreds of faculty and fellowship advisers at colleges and universities across the United States.

The 62 new Truman Scholars selected in 2013 are diverse in just about every way imaginable, except in their shared commitments to public service leadership. Four are current or former active duty military or cadets at one of the service academies. Twenty-nine have focused their energies on international issues, while the remaining thirty-three are engaged with domestic concerns.

One school had its first ever Truman Scholar in 2013: Angelo State University in San Angelo, Texas. The names and brief information about each of the 2013 Truman Scholars are included at the end of this report. Truman Scholarships were conferred in a ceremony at the Truman Presidential Library in Independence, Missouri, on June 2, 2013.

Truman Programming

When the first class of Truman Scholars was selected in 1977, the freshly minted Scholars – all college sophomores – were flown to Independence, Missouri, for a weekend ceremony to be recognized among their peers and sent off with $20,000 in scholarship support. The money was the award. Back then, Scholars received support for their last two years of college and the first portion of a graduate program, and they met each other only that one time, as they received the award in Missouri. From there, we sent them off to finish their educations with independence from one another and from the Truman Scholarship Foundation.

Times have changed, and so has the Truman Scholar experience. During the past 37 years, the number and types of graduate programs relevant to public service have multiplied; so too have the challenges facing leaders in public service. In response, the mandate of the Truman Foundation has evolved so that we not only provide financial support to an outstanding collection of individual “change agents,” but we also seek to build community among them. Community building among Truman Scholars strengthens their knowledge of the diverse paths to public service leadership, it deepens their commitment to lead and work in collaboration with others, and it forms bonds of lasting friendship.

We begin with a new class of Scholars in late May, when each group is brought together for five days in Missouri for Truman Scholars Leadership Week (TSLW). The week consists of community and team building activities, leadership development, and policy discussions. The new Scholars are provided with intensive mentoring throughout the week by a group of nine former Truman Scholars, all of whom are about ten years into their chosen careers. These Senior Scholars take part in group and one-on-one sessions about the personal and professional trials and tribulations associated with careers in public service.

In 2013, we were joined at TSLW by two distinguished public service leaders who are also former Truman Scholars, who spent time with the new class of Scholars:

- Ganesh Sitaraman (GA '03) spoke with the new Scholars about his new book, The Counterinsurgent's Constitution: Law in the Age of Small Wars (Oxford University Press, 2012). Sitaraman is Assistant Professor of Law at Vanderbilt Law School. He served as Policy Director to Elizabeth Warren's Senate campaign in 2011-12.
- Max Finberg (NY '90) was the final speaker of the week and was recipient of the Truman Foundation's 2013 Staats Award. Named for the Truman Foundation's former Chairman Elmer Staats, the Staats Award each year recognizes a Truman Scholar who has led a distinguished public service career and made significant contributions to the Truman Scholar community. Finberg shared lessons of his path through public service. Finberg is currently Senior Advisor to U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Tom Vilsack.

It has long been our custom at the Truman Foundation to organize TSLW to produce a state of “constructive confusion” for new Truman Scholars: encouraging the Scholars to carefully examine their chosen professional paths along with their plans for graduate study, all outlined with great specificity in their Scholar applications. In many cases, we advise new Scholars to take time off between college and graduate school in order to acquire professional experience and to clarify that their chosen graduate degrees make the most sense for what they want to be doing in the long term.

In order to assist Scholars in these regards, the Foundation supports two programs that bring Truman Scholars to Washington, DC, for a period between college and graduate study to participate in internships or jobs in public service. The first of these programs is the Truman Summer Institute, available to Truman Scholars a year following when they receive the award, typically the summer after they graduate from college. Summer Institute is designed to deepen understanding of the national policymaking process and enhance community among participants.

In 2013, 42 Truman Scholars from the class of 2012 participated in Summer Institute. In addition to participation in internships across the federal government and in nationally focused nonprofits, the Scholars came together every Tuesday evening to make presentations to one another – short talks – to better acquaint their fellow Scholars with their states, hobbies, or interests.

Scholars also spent a day on Capitol Hill where they learned more about the legislative branch in a program jointly sponsored with the Stennis Center for Public Service. In addition, Summer Institute participants spent half a day at the Supreme Court, where they had the opportunity to hear from Justice Clarence Thomas about the role of the Court in the American political system. They heard as well from Martina Vandenberg (CA, '88), the 2013 recipient of the Truman Foundation's Stevens Award, an annual award to a Truman Scholar who has distinguished him- or herself in the legal profession. The award is named for Judge Joseph E. Stevens, Jr., a former President of the Harry S. Truman Scholarship Foundation. Martina Vandenberg is currently founder and president of The Human Trafficking Pro Bono Legal Center.

Following Summer Institute, sixteen of the Summer Institute participants stayed on in Washington, DC, to participate in the year-long Truman-Albright Fellows Program, a program made possible thanks to the generous support of the Truman Foundation's President, Madeleine K. Albright. Truman-Albright Fellows have full-time positions in public service and participate in activities designed to expand their knowledge, horizons, and networks as public service leaders. They are required to participate in fifteen Tuesday evening workshops (with meetings once every two weeks between September and March) and in a unique mentoring program that matches each of them with a more experienced Truman Scholar with similar interests.

The program is well underway for 2013-14. By the end of the program, as in prior years, Truman-Albright Fellows will be better equipped to make decisions about their professional futures and better supported to make those decisions with the advice of a wide range of seasoned leaders in public service.

In 2013, the Truman Foundation initiated two new programs open to Truman Scholars from all cohorts who have a particular interest in electoral politics or senior positions in the federal executive branch: The Truman Democracy Fellows, and the Truman Governance Fellows, respectively. We launched the Truman Democracy Fellows Program this year. The Governance Fellows Program will run next year.

We opened the Democracy Fellows Program to Truman Scholars from any year who were based here in DC this year and have an expressed interest in running for office. We had substantial interest in the program, and we selected an inaugural cohort of seventeen Democracy Fellows in 2013. The program provided a series of workshops and off-the-record conversations led by senior elected figures and others who have been involved with the electoral process. Speakers, all of whom shared something about their professional path and experience through the electoral arena, included:

- Stacey Abrams (MS, '94), House Minority Leader, Georgia General Assembly
- Jules Bailey (OR, '00), Oregon State Representative.
- Senator Chris Coons (DE, '83), U.S. Senator, Delaware
- Congressman Ted Deutch (PA, '86), Member of the U.S. House, Florida
- Senator Heidi Heitkamp, U.S. Senator, North Dakota
- Bob Holste (PA, '83), former senior aide on House/Senate campaigns
- Bryson Morgan (UT, '07), Election and campaign finance lawyer
- Dayne Walling (MI, '95), Mayor of Flint, Michigan

The Truman Scholar Experience

Over the years, the Truman Scholarship Foundation has refined a program that begins with the best features of other long-established, high prestige national scholarships (e.g., Rhodes and Marshall) by partnering with almost 300 of the leading colleges and universities across the country to identify the nation's most talented young leaders. We combine these qualities with a single-minded and long-term programmatic commitment to improving the ranks of public service and the direction of national affairs in the United States.

A look back suggests that our impact has been substantial. Truman Scholars serve in elected and appointed positions at all levels of government: mayors, state legislators, state and local judges, and, at the national level, a member of the U.S. Senate and a member of the U.S. House. In 2013, three Truman Scholars became big city mayors, in Cincinnati, San Diego, and New York City. In addition, in 2013, six Truman Scholars were named Rhodes Scholars; four were named Marshall Scholars; and one was made a Mitchell Scholar.

Truman Scholars are leading major foundations and national and international NGOs. Across the country and around the world, Truman Scholars are judges, legislators, executives, and organizers; they are teachers, doctors, scientists, and scholars. A partial list of where some Truman Scholars are today is included at the end of this report. It is a remarkable group, a signal of our success at achieving precisely what President Truman and his admirers had in mind when the Truman Scholarship Foundation was conceived as the living memorial to our 33rd president.
